"I live in West Village, just down the street from The New School. It's one of those places where you can't help but become a foodie because there are so many amazing choices, just a short walk away. I stick to a plant based diet and am always on the look out for vegan cafes and restaurants. I frequent Peacefood Cafe, which has delicious baked goods like cookies, muffins and cupcakes that I can't resist. They also have a good selection of salads where you'll find the typical kale/quinoa/tempeh combinations. The other place that I absolutely have to mention is By Chloe's. There's a location near Washington Square Park and Flat burger are to die for! Right next door there's also By Chloe's Bakery. The other type of food I've been getting lately when I go out is Ethiopian food. It's veg friendly and kind of a fun way to get together with friends and share. Then of course, I can't go without mentioning all of the great local coffee shops in the area like Grounded on Jane St. To be honest, I don't drink very much coffee, but they have a great tea selection and you can also get a tofu scramble wrap for breakfast."
