

LET'S TALK FOOD.

Words & Graphics by Mahek Singh

as told by Greenwich Village resident Taylor Kim

The food options around me are endless! I live in Greenwich Village which means I am about a ten to fifteen minute walk from any restaurant in the East Village, Lower East Side, NoLita, Chelsea, and the West Village. On top of that there is bodega right next to my building—but I wouldn't go there after 2 PM. I don't trust food that has been sitting out for that long.

As a college student I am all about yummy, healthy, food options that I can eat on the go. Options like Sweet-Green, Fresh&Co, byChloes, and DigInn are perfect because it meet all of my needs. Also, the opened up PokéWorks three blocks from me. Super dangerous!

Poké is Hawaiian dish typically served with chunks of tuna marinated in sesame and soy sauce, and served over rice. It's salty, savory, and filling!

But there is also a balance between high and low end restaurants—sometimes a girl likes to treat herself ya' know?

There are a lot of cute brunch restaurants/cafes that people don't really know unless you live here or come down here a lot like Sweet Chick—without doubt the best buttermilk fried-chicken biscuit you will ever it. It's soft, crunchy, flakey, and the biscuit is freshly made. I am originally from the South, so it tastes like home but with a New York kick!

