

HELL'S KITCHEN FOOD

● ●

EDITED BY KC BADALA

I live in Hell's Kitchen, so there's really only restaurants. The neighborhood is mostly known for its proximity to Broadway and the food, 46 st between 9th & 8th avenue is even called "restaurant row." In the restaurant row alone, (so only one street) there's Japanese, Chinese, Brazilian, Spanish, Korean, a burger place, and a Louisiana cuisine. There's something for everyone.

Marseille is my favorite because my family has been going there for a while since it's just 2 blocks away from where I live. The food could be better, but I think we keep going back because of the decor & overall vibe mostly. One of the owners is French & the walls have a bunch of French writing on them so it feels homey & it's an easy way to feel as though we were back in France.
