Unfortunately, between work and school, I haven't been able to explore my neighborhood — West Hempstead — as much as I would like. Through driving, I have noticed that it's a diner town; there are diners everywhere, which is nice because it's always convenient and affordable. These diners also satisfy the great diversity in my neighborhood as they offer a wide range of food options. Even better, it doesn't break the bank especially if, like me, you're on a budget.

===== MY NEIGHBORHOOD
REALLY OFFERS A VARIETY OF
FOOD OPTIONS TO ANYONE IN ANY CIRCUMSTANCE. =====

My neighborhood has a high and low income range. I've also noticed that on the lower income side of the neighborhood there's a lot of fast food restaurants, such as White Castle (which I love) and Wendy's. Towards the middle/higher income spectrum there's more family owned restaurants that have been in business for a while including King Umbertos, an amazing true Italian restaurant that I ate at last night. Overall, my neighborhood really offers a variety of food options to anyone in any circumstance. You can buy 10 burgers from White Castle for $5, get well cooked meals at the diners for average prices, or can you eat out and eat a $20 pasta dish.
